JEN WINS AGAIN!

Jen's Can't touch this team

3 valley rally report

You can tell the 3 Valley Rally event is nearby when the competitive ones try desperately to eek any information about where the checkpoints are. For the first time the former Jump team were absent, choosing to work on a checkpoint instead. Reigning triple champion Jen looking to make it 4 in a row and Louis's doubletap team looking to end the dream.

Checkpoint 1

After collecting their egg (nearly) everyone worked out the piste map with no names and headed off to in the direction of 1650 to meet Jimbo and Phil half way down Chapalets where they were subject to a whiskey rum layback and either a boy/girl salopette swapping (see Will Gill Zebra leggings on page 2) or a boy/girl wheelbarrow race up the slope followed by a forward roll back down again.

Checkpoint 2

To find the second checkpoint required a modicum of French to translate the words "Soft Madness" into the Folie Douce in Val Thorens. There they were offered a drink of orange vodka, only to

The end is nigh

I know it's not even Easter yet but already Courchevel 1850 is starting to shut down. Snolimit closed on Friday. The Jump bar is closing for the season on Sunday night. The first of many closing parties. Promises to be one to remember. Live DJ Kir from 10.30. Come and drink the bar dry. From Wednesday the Kalico will be reducing it's regular opening hours, closing at midnight. More details can be found below.

Hair. I'd like to talk about it. The amount some people shed is both intolerable and fascinating. Hairs are like toenail clippings and grandparents. You don't mind your own but other people's are revolting and you don't want them anywhere near you and especially not your food.

Some marriages are made in heaven. Smoked salmon and avocado, for example. Strawberries and cream. Chas and Dave. Others are not. Rum and raisin. A hellish idea. Charles and Diana. Hair and food. Wong dot com.

For the above reasons, clearing up after children in a chalet is a dream come true as the little darlings haven't yet sprouted. They do leave the most appalling skid marks though.

However adults are another story. They seem to spend their entire time either shedding like a mangey St Bernard or harvesting crops of body hairs from god knows where. If you're not scraping a film of minute, freshly cropped sproutings from the side of the bath, or untangling long slimy hairs interlaced with goo and excretions from the plug hole, you're sweeping heaps of unidentified strands from the bathroom floor. Either the nanny staying in our chalet a few weeks back had alopecia or extremely long pubes. I could have stuffed a mattress with it. Seriously.

A while back we had a family staying with us: The hairiest, messiest and loudest family on earth for sure. They were charming enough socially, however I refuse to believe you can shed that much hair without being a werewolf. I also refuse to believe that you can accidentally stick dental floss to the wall, tread an entire packet of cream crackers into the 4 metres of carpet and not notice, leave poo on the floor of the shower, or allow your teenaged son to puke on the carpet and not even mention it let alone apologise.

I refuse to believe you can leave skid marks of that magnitude without suffering one iota of shame or self-loathing.

I refuse to believe you can do any of the above without being some sort of cunt.

So, as I'm telling all my friends, next time you're staying in a hotel / chalet / catered accommodation, spare a thought for the poor mite scabbling around on her hands and knees in your bathroom in the morning, collecting together your deposits.

I might start some kind of museum.

Once again Will Gill's team had their trousers down find it was actually chilli tequila. One of the girls was also relieved of her bra, which were luckily reunited with their owners after the prize giving.

Checkpoint 3

Positioned at the bottom of the Jerusalem slope in St Martin de Belleville 1 spent most of the day sitting in the sun and drinking. After having a sip of Chartreuse the team were tied at the knee to make a 5 legged race, through some soft off piste. From the general shouts of pain as the cable bit into their knees it was clear that some teams were less co-ordinated than others. Before they could leave they have to make a human pyramid.

Lost in St Martin

As each team came through the question was raised "Where is Will Gill's team?". Considering they were near the front of the field at checkpoint 2 their apparent absence was noted. Eventually I phoned Will to find he had skied passed the checkpoint and was taking the chairlift back over to Meribel. By the time they had skied back to the checkpoint (again) you could see the look of dejection and exhaustion in all their eyes. Next time don't let Jen(Physio) read the clue.

Checkpoint 4

The "cripple" checkpoint, hosted by Emma and Lucy, had competitors removing one sock, exposing themselves again and passing the sock through their pants. To put things indelicately in certain cases C-L-U-N-G-E was on display.

Finish

Once again, from start to finish, Jen dominated the race finishing with a cool 15-minute gap before Louis' Double tap team. Subsequently the 3 Valley Rally trophy will now be renamed as the Jennifer Claire commemorative good sportman trophy Despite finishing fourth the Fairy cakes were demoted to sixth after 3/4 of the team missed the first checkpoint.

A big thanks to Jimbo, Phil, Ryan(Snowlinx), Oscar (Powderwhite), Marc, Eliza, India, Lucy(Jump) and Emma for manning the checkpoints. A big thanks to the Refuge bar for hosting the prize giving.

Anyone wanting to check out photo from the day. Currently 132 (and counting) from the event can be found on www.courchevelenquirer.com.
